

About Kates Kesler

Kates Kesler is an organization design firm. We work with leaders of successful companies to build organizations capable of executing on complex, global growth strategies.

What we bring:

- » Thought leadership
- » A tested and proven process
- » A focus on building capabilities
- » A belief in participation and engagement
- » Implementation and activation support
- » Transfer of knowledge, tools, and methods

Greg consults with CEOs and other senior leaders on global organization design and activation, including the development global executive talent.

Greg has led whole company, global redesign projects for multi-national companies in the consumer packaged goods, food and beverage, capital equipment, and healthcare sectors. He provides counsel to CEOs and executive teams in designing and activating global operating models and governance practices in large multi-national organizations. He has developed and implemented succession-planning and executive assessment practices at numerous major companies.

He is the co-author of Bridging Organization Design and Performance (John Wiley, 2016) and Leading Organization Design (Jossey-Bass, 2011), as well as numerous articles and book chapters. He teaches and speaks on the subject to executive groups in public and in-house programs and is a Resource Partner to the Center for Effective Organizations at the Marshall School of Business at USC.

Greg's clients include PepsiCo, United Technologies, Raytheon, Nike, VF Corporation, Novartis, Deere & Co., Kimberly Clark, and many others.

Before beginning his consulting career, Greg held senior HR management positions in the U.S. and Europe for Fortune 200 companies. Greg holds a Master's Degree in Organization and Human Relations from the University of Kansas.

Greg can be contacted at greg@kateskesler.com.

